

WATER STORED BEHIND BIG DAM; ENOUGH TO IRRIGATE ALL LANDS

Rio Grande Pouring Its Waters Into Lake B. M. Hall Until Supply Is Now Sufficient to Irrigate All Cultivated Lands With Two Feet of Water; Government Spending Almost $500,000 Below Dam.

THERE is now sufficient water stored behind the great $10,000,000 Elephant Butte dam to irrigate all of the land now under cultivation under the project to a depth of two feet or to give the entire 150,000 acres signed up under the project one good irrigation.

While all El Paso has been watching the final development of the miracle dam at Elephant Butte, comparatively few people knew that there was a big head of water behind the dam and more being stored there every day as the waters of the Rio Grande flow down from the mountains. Neither do but few people of El Paso and the valley know that in addition to the work that is being done at the dam, the reclamation service is spending almost $500,000 on the project exclusive of the work being done at the dam itself.

Water Now 60 Feet Deep. That this is true is proved by the records of the reclamation service of the dam. The water behind the dam is now 60 feet deep and is as clear as crystal and a motor boat is operating on its surface at 25 cents a round trip. Situated in terms of acre feet, which is the irrigation man's unit, there are 197,000 acre feet of water behind the dam at the present time and the water level is rising at the rate of nine inches a day, on the average.

Water is being run through the spillways of the big dam and is being diverted for irrigation in the various valleys below the dam by means of the canal systems. The water that is now running in the Franklin canal is that which poured through the spillways of the dam several days ago and the dam water is being received as far down the valley as San Elizario, the reclamation officials declare.

Summit to Canal Work. To prepare for the economical handling of the water from the dam, the reclamation service is expending more than $400,000 in diversion dams, canals and other project work. The Mesilla diversion dam is now being constructed five miles south of Las Cruces at the head of the San Miguel ditch. This diversion dam is of concrete and will divert water from the river to both the east and west side valleys. It will require all summer to complete this dam and it will be one of the largest of the project. It is to form a permanent bridge when completed.

Upper Valley Canals. To carry the diverted water from this diversion dam the main canal and the side canals are being completed. The earthwork on these main canals has been completed and the bridges, dikes and gates of concrete are being built. The west side canal is completed for 14 miles below the diversion dam on the west side of the river. The east side canal is completed down ten miles on the east side. The west side canal extends to Chambliss and the east side canal to a point between Mesquite and Vado. There they join the old canals. These new canals will be ready for use the latter part of the present irrigation season. This canal work, when completed, is estimated to cost about $100,000 or even more.

Work in Lower Valley. The reclamation service is completing a few small jobs on the Franklin canal below El Paso. A bridge is being finished where the canal crosses Building Activity Indicates Continuous Blocks of Residences to the Post.

Despite the coming summer, there is apparently no decrease in building activity. At least 60 homes, large and small, are in course of construction in different portions of the city and several will be ready for occupancy this week. Two new apartment houses, one at West Missouri street and the other on Wyoming, are nearing completion. The residential boundaries are widening every week and local builders say that by the end of the year there will be solid blocks of residences to Fort Bliss and beyond the northern loop of the El Paso street car line. The selling of unimproved property for speculation and building purposes is brisk and the approach of hot weather seems not to have depressed the business to any extent.
